WINE LIST

We have taken a different approach with our wine list. Our selections are organized by country of origin and we have divided the taste profiles into four main categories. Sparkling and Champagne, Islands and Coasts, Mountains and Valleys, and The Garden. Below we have explained each category to provide insight into the styles of wine they produce and what you can look for in each section. On the following pages, we hope you will discover and enjoy the impact that geography and topography can have on a wine's taste.

SPARKLING - CHAMPAGNE & THE WORLD

Champagne is often considered a generic term for wine with bubbles, but bit by bit the world is coming around to the French understanding, that Champagne is not just a frothy wine but a place. The region, which lies about 2 hours to the northeast of Paris, has created diversity in the wine style made principally from three iconic grapes, Chardonnay, Pinot Noir and Pinot Meunier. Although the common thread of effervescence will be found, we believe the palate of flavors feature more than fizz but a wine that pairs exceptionally well with our cuisine. While Champagne is a geographical place, the world over emulates the style of production. France, Germany, Spain and Italy along with many places in the New World all have appellations dedicated to making wine in the same method as the Champenoise. We have chosen some of the best representations of those styles to enjoy as a wonderful alternative to our Champagne selections.

ISLANDS & COASTS

Across the world, the influence of coastlines and oceans along with the unique geology of volcanic islands has a profound impact on the taste and style of the wines made in these regions. From the broad Atlantic Ocean to the arid, near desert-like climates around the Mediterranean Sea, from the frigid waters of the great Southern Ocean to Port Philip Bay, from the islands and coasts of Italy, Greece and Spain all the way to gorgeous western coastline of the United States where the mighty Pacific reigns, we have selected a combination of white and red wines that embody the flavors which transport you to these bucolic places. Cool ocean breezes and salinity in the air lend fresh and vibrant qualities to the mostly unoaked whites, while reds benefit from the same cooling influence but can often take on more power from the buckets of sunshine that cascade through the vineyards.

MOUNTAINS & VALLEYS

As we move inland, mountains burst from the earth only to peer down at the valleys they've created below, forming distinct styles of wine unique to this sort of geography. Altitude along with steep slopes and thin rocky soils mark the terrain of the mountain vineyards, while valley floor geology can produce sites more rich in nutrients. Wines from these areas vary distinctly depending upon the part of the world they hail from and will showcase fresh, rich power in a multitude of styles.

THE GARDEN

Vegetables from the garden are often some of the most naturally flavorful ingredients of the kitchen. They can also be some of the most challenging for wine to pair with. The difficulty lies in the herbaceous, earthy and often bitter tones that drive their taste. Market fresh vegetables take center stage in a variety of dishes on our menu so we have chosen a series of wines that will serve to compliment. These wines come from an array of regions but all tend to showcase an aromatic and flavor profile which will lend themselves to the pleasant savory and bitter elements inherent in the produce we offer.
